December 10th

7 January 2011

After reading the Artforum Scene and Herd, I find December 10th was a remarkable day. In parallel to the Tate hosted lunch for me and 170 Women in Art, Miuccia Prada is hanging out in a male dominated environment in Ukraine at Victor Pinchuk's spectacular event, with the likes of Damien Hirst, Nick Serota, Jeff Koons, Andreas Gursky etc. I am not quite sure who won the prize?

Meanwhile back in London there I am with these incredible women and celebrating my BIG Birthday.

In my speech I also told everyone "there is definitely something in the air, could this be the beginning of another change?" I told these great ladies including Jenny Lomax, Tracey Emin and Sue Webster that "behind our stoic facades of intellect and image we are all very vulnerable and should be a support system to each other."

Victor commented that "I believe in the power of women". And Miuccia replied "Women have to decide how to use power and not continue to live in the shadow of men".

OMG: I'm in St Barths and I approach, all happy to see this older guy, an art dealer old friend, or so I thought and I really got the hint. I am not telling you who he is but it feels mean and creepy. I wish I was not so sensitive to this kind of thing, sometimes the art world can very uncool and cruel. Usually I am protected from this rubbish.Feeling a little deflated I kept away from the St Barths circus where one had to hustle for an invite to one of the mega mega humongous boat parties and had a lovely time with my family and friends mainly artists, collectors, writers and musicians.

Artist Mr Brainwash who thought my Dad was like a sculpture and proceeded to take umpteen photos. He fell asleep on the sofa so many times during our trip we were naming him "Dead Dad" after the work by Ron Mueck

Another year and I decide my New Year resolution is to continue on the path I have started. I do not want to change a thing!
